Stability and security in Africa: the role of hard and soft power.

---

Context:

Defining power is complex and ambiguous but understanding its elements and implications on national and foreign policies remains central to the study of international relations. Both 'hard' and 'soft' powers are employed to pursue political and strategic goals through military, economic, diplomatic and others ways of conquering hearts and minds, to create convincing incentives and exercise influence.

Introduced in 1990, the notion of soft power refers to a country's ability to spread its influence and effectively persuade without the use of coercion and traditional force. However, while on the aftermath of the Cold War this concept exclusively referred to the cultural and economic force of persuasion of the United States in the international scene, currently, the use of soft power is no longer specific to US foreign diplomacy. In fact, emerging powers such as China and India are also using their soft power resources including investments, foreign aid and cultural products to bring forward their national interests and strategic goals abroad.

The use of military, economic or diplomatic tools to leverage diplomatic efforts continues to represent a perennial issue in the field of international relations. The dichotomy between hard and soft power has also been revisited and questioned as some argue that a "grey" area exists where both means are used by states to defend in their interest. The growth of violent extremism and the challenge this represents to the existing international order has also called for an inclusive and comprehensive approach that brings together hard and soft power tools. These mechanisms have been increasingly taken into account within the African continent, where policy makers do not only count on the effect traditional power can have in ending crises and conflicts.

The promotion of good governance practices, stronger economic cooperation and the availability of alternative narratives to the extremist discourse combined with relevant diplomatic tools to promote social justice and equality, quality education, better infrastructure, social empowerment and fair job opportunities for the youth is often going hand in hand with military means in order to find sustainable and effective solutions to security threats and conflicts. In addition, food also, has the potential to become a dominant political issue worldwide and mostly in Africa where the population is set to double by 2050.

It is against this context that the OCP Policy Center and Al Akhawayn University, invite the submission of papers analyzing the role of power in building and fostering stability and security in Africa. Papers can deal with a broad based variety of topics related to this theme, such as:

- Theoretical and conceptual analysis of power relations in or with African states;
- The BRICS and soft power tools in Africa;
- Uses of power in African foreign policies. Focus can be on either hard or soft power, or in the mix of both.

- Regional and international actions including soft and/or hard power tools, to fight radicalism in Africa;
- Conflict resolution in Africa (case studies and general perspectives);
- Force of persuasion and power in Africa, what is at stake? What are the key resources used for this purpose? ;
- Continental and regional African institutions' use of power and policy outcomes;
- State-building and the role of power;
- Food power and security in Africa (...)
